NOT A PIMPLE ON HIM NOW.

Bad with Eczema. Hair all gone. Scalp covered with eruptions. Thought his hair would never grow. Cured by Cuticura Remedies. Hair splendid and not a pimple on him.

I cannot say enough in praise of the CUTICURA REMEDIES. My boy, when one year of age, was so bad with eczema that he lost all of his hair. His scalp was covered with eruptions, which the doctors said was scald head, and that his hair would never grow again. Despairing of a cure from physicians, I began the use of the CUTICURA REMEDIES, and, I am happy to say, with the most perfect success. His hair is now splendid, and there is not a pimple on him. I recommend the CUTICURA REMEDIES to mothers as the most speedy, economical, and sure cure for all skin diseases of infants and children, and feel that every mother who has an afflicted child will thank me for so doing.
MRS. M. E. WOODSUM, Norway, Me.

A Fever Sore Eight Years Cured.

I must extend to you the thanks of one of my customers, who has been cured by using the CUTICURA REMEDIES, of an old sore, caused by a long spell of sickness or fever eight years ago. He was so bad he was fearful he would have to have his leg amputated, but is happy to say he is now entirely well,—sound as a dollar. He requests me to use his name, which is H. H. CASON, merchant of this place.

Severe Scalp Disease Cured.

A few weeks ago my wife suffered very much from a cutaneous disease of the scalp, and received no relief from the various remedies she used until she tried CUTICURA. The disease promptly yielded to this treatment, and in a short while she was entirely well. There has been no return of the disease, and CUTICURA ranks No. 1 in our estimation for diseases of the skin.

STATE NEWS.

Aroostook.

There are said to be eight or nine drives "hung up" on the Aroostook river, between Caribou and Presque Isle. Old settlers say they never before saw the water so low at this time of year.

Radishes, grown this season in the Vaughan House garden, were on the table of the hotel on Thursday, May 16th. In the same garden peas are up several inches and potatoes make a good showing above ground, says the Caribou Republican.

Cumberland.

In the Portland Municipal Court, Wednesday, Capt. John Fogg, of Freeport, was brought up, charged with shooting his son-in-law some time ago. He waived examination and was bound over to the September term of the Supreme Judicial Court in $2,000 bonds.

A pretty thoroughly intoxicated man who lives in Lewiston, was picked up by a hackman at the Union station, Portland, Wednesday. The Lewiston man showed the hackman a handful of money, and wanted to be taken to a place he named, which has a very shady reputation. The hackman, who happened to be an honest man, took the Lewiston man aboard and drove him straight to the police station where the officers locked him up for drunkenness. The Lewiston man had about one hundred and ten dollars on his person, and it is safe enough to say that if the hackman had taken him where he wanted to go, he would have lost every cent of it before morning.

Hancock.

William Beazley, Esq., of Ellsworth, has been appointed to the position of Insurance Inspector for Foreign and American Shipping for Eastern Maine, left vacant by the death of the late Sewall B. Swazey, Esq.

The Harbor Record reports the drowning of a man named Theodore Loring, at Somes' Sound, recently. He had been drinking and fell overboard. A boy named Joe Reed, who was in the boat with him, in attempting to save him, upset the boat and was saved by parties from the shore.

Capt. Thomas Stanley, of Islesford, was found dead in the bottom of his boat, one day last week, the boat being half full of water. He had been a victim to heart trouble lately, and it was thought he had fallen in a faint, rocking the boat sufficiently to cause her to ship the water and then drowning before he could recover consciousness. Captain Stanley was eighty-four years of age, and leaves five children, two of whom are residents of the island, reports the Bar Harbor Record.

Kennebec.

The anniversary exercises at Wayland Seminary, Washington, D. C., occur on the evening of Wednesday, May 29. Prof. A. W. Small, of Colby University, will make the address to the graduating class.

A case of voluntary starvation is reported at North Pittston, in the person of a man named Watson Goodspeed. Mr. Goodspeed is a man about forty-five years of age, born and bred in Pittston, and now living with Mr. Wm. Toby. He has been without nourishment, except water, since the tenth of this month, and for the last six days he has been without even water. He says he doesn't want to live any longer and will never take any more food; so says a special to the Kennebec Journal.

Knox.

Trouble is brewing for the postmaster at Camden. Complaint will be made against him by the firm of Kilgore, Wilson & Hanson, of Belfast. This firm manufactures Dana's Sarsaparilla, and advertised largely by sending circular letters through the mails. Their method is to obtain the voting list of a town, and then mail a circular letter to every name on it. Camden was recently treated in this manner. The sarsaparilla firm claim that the Camden postmaster did not distribute the circulars. A Camden man came to Belfast and brought with him forty-one circulars addressed to people in Camden village. The man went before a justice of the peace and made affidavit that the circulars were brought into his place of business by the post office officials for the purpose of burning them. It is also in evidence that several of the circulars have been put into one delivery box. The postmaster is Mr. R. C. Fletcher, who was appointed by President Cleveland, and was held over under the present administration until his successor was appointed, yesterday. Mr. Fletcher is a druggist.

Piscataquis.

The Dover Observer says, Rev. T. H. Murphy, the newly appointed Methodist minister at Guilford, had a shock of paralysis, Friday, and although able to walk about, his physician considers his condition critical.

Sagadahoc.

Wednesday evening, a tramp entered the house of Alexander Kingsbury, who lives at the North End, Bath, and, finding no men at home, ordered something to eat and made himself generally at home. But before the pedestrian had reigned many minutes, Mr. Kingsbury's brother happened in and promptly "bounced" the intruder, who ran off up the railroad track and escaped before the police could be summoned. Beyond the fright given Mrs. Kingsbury no harm was done.

Wednesday evening, Rev. E. E. White, pastor of the Elm street Baptist church, Bath, took the Boston steamer on his way to New York, where he will take passage for Glasgow, Scotland. Mr. White will pass three months abroad, visiting Edinburg, London, Liverpool, Paris, Rome, Pompeii and Switzerland. Wednesday evening his congregation held a sociable at their vestry, while one of his parishioners took him out for a short walk and, private conversation, a purse of $100 was quietly made up and presented to him on his return. During the absence of the pastor, services will continue as usual at this church under other pastors of Bath and neighboring places.

Waldo.

Crosby Inn, Belfast, is very nearly completed and is to be opened to the public Saturday, June 1st. There are over sixty sleeping rooms. The dining room can be made [illegible] from all over the country, yet when the race comes off it will be doubtful if more than six or eight stand, for many will be found lacking speed as they will have to trot in about 2.30 to stand any show of winning.

Short Cuts.

Louisa M. Alcott's biography is definitely promised for next September.

Boston gossips say James Russell Lowell's trip to Europe means marriage with an English woman of rank.

The proprietors of seaside resorts are happy in anticipation of a warm and lively season, but the majority of them will need to make money very fast to cover last season's defects.

A soldier belonging to a detachment of the Austrian army in Transylvania was recently killed by a bullet from a Mannlicher rifle discharged during target practice at a distance of more than two and a half miles.

James Arthur MacKnight, the author of "Hagar," which is making such a stir in literary circles, was formerly United States consul at St. Helena. He is a tall, smoothed-faced, handsome man, possibly thirty years old. He is at present at work on a new novel.

A Russian navy officer has invented a method of searching the sea or coast by night, which does not reveal the position of the ship. A mortar fires a buoyant shell containing a compound which ignites on reaching the water and lights up the surrounding area.

Progress is again to be recorded in the matter of powerful war ships. The Italian ironclad Ruggiero di Lauria, which has just been tried for speed, reaching 17.6 knots, carries four of the largest guns yet brought into practice, 110 tons. Her sister ship, Andrea Doria, will soon be ready.

Bees took possession of a grocery store in Plainfield, N. J., one day last week, swarming upon a quantity of comb honey in one of the show windows. There were thousands of the little insects, and their presence destroyed trade for the remainder of the day. When night came the grocer and his clerks smoked the store with sulphur, thereby killing the honey makers.

Near New York City, are several very fine parks, larger than Central Park. Bronx Park contains 653 acres lying along the Bronx River, Van Cortlandt Park, 1070 acres midway between the Hudson and Bronx rivers, and Pelham Bay Park with 1740 acres and a coast line of two miles. Adding 852 acres for Central Park and we find 4240 acres devoted to breathing places for the people.

A prominent citizen of Parsons, Kan., determined to sup with a party of friends against the will of his wife. He was resolved that he would, and she that he should not go. He did not go. His friends missed him, and just for fun invaded his residence, where they found him and his wife sitting in their chairs fast asleep. He had given her an opiate that he might slip away, and she had given him one that he might not.

The American pickpockets who visited the Paris Exposition are having a hard time. Mr. Byrnes, of New York, sent photographs of nearly five hundred thieves, pickpockets and burglars to the Chief of Police of Paris, and now as soon as an American rascal steps into the exposition he is hailed by name, and notified to keep his hands in his own pockets and out of the pockets of other people. If he takes his hands out of his pockets he is locked up.

Gen. Boulanger occupies a house in Portland place, London, which was tenanted last year by Mr. D'Arcey, the Australian millionaire. The house was furnished by its former occupant, Col. Ellis, English Consul-General to Persia. At the door of Boulanger's study stands a large bust of Napoleon I. Over the mantel are figures of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette. In the drawing-room are portraits of Napoleon III. and the Empress Eugenie. All these reminders of French history were placed in the house by Col. Ellis.

As a boy the late Washington Irving Bishop was a terror. An old schoolmate of his says that all his classmates stood in awe of him, and that even his mother was horrified by some of his pranks. One day in the schoolroom he took a snake out of his pocket and set it crawling toward the teacher, who was scared out of his wits. In later years he used to delight in surrounding himself with mystery, and in street cars and other public places would frighten bystanders by apparently swallowing live frogs and taking rabbits out of the pockets of strangers.

Count Tolstoi, the Russian author, like our Mark Twain, can't write in a "fixed-up" room. His study is devoid of carpets, paintings and statuary. An old lounge, two unpretentious tables littered with manuscripts of all kinds, and two stiff-backed chairs, constitute the only furniture in the room. The room is divided into two compartments by an unpainted wooden partition which runs half-way up to the ceiling, and from which depends two wooden rakes—used by Tolstoi in his garden. In one corner stands a wooden spade—above it, hanging from a wooden peg, Tolstoi's great overcoat.

A traveller who recently returned from Pekin, China, asserts that there is plenty to smell in that city, but very little to see. Most of the show places such as the temple of heaven and the marble bridge have one by one been closed to outside barbarians, who cannot even bribe their way. The houses are all very low and mean, the streets are wholly unpaved and are always very muddy or dusty, and as there are no sewers or cesspools the filthiness of the town is indescribable. He adds that the public buildings are small, and in a decayed and tumble-down condition, and the nearest one can get to the emperor's palace is to climb to the top of some building outside the sacred inclosure and surreptitiously peep over the wall through an open glass. Even then he does not see much.

Wholly Unconscious.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MISS KATE PATTEN AT BOSTON HIGHLANDS.

Miss Kate Patten, a quiet, prepossessing young lady living in Roxbury, has apparently died and come to life again. The circumstances of her case are somewhat similar to those of Washington Irving Bishop, only she has the good fortune to escape death. Last Wednesday, Miss Patten was taken suddenly ill. The regular family physician called, and soon satisfied himself that the case was one of tonsilitis. The attack was a very severe one. Everything possible was done for the poor girl, but she did not rally, and on Sunday experienced a fainting spell. Two doctors were at once summoned. A brief examination convinced the two physicians that Katie was no longer in the land of the living. One of the physicians placed his hand over her heart, but failed to find that the vital organ was still beating. Every sign that usually marks the presence of [illegible] were made for the [illegible] body. [illegible]

Decision in Law.

The following decision in law has been received by Charles P. Sweet, Esq., Clerk of the Eastern Law District:

PISCATAQUIS COUNTY CASE.

Stephen D. Millett in Eq., vs. Frank E. Blake & als. "The plaintiff has the right to redeem the Smith mortgage as prayed for. The amount due to be assessed at nisi prius or a master in chancery may be appointed." Costs for plaintiff."

Rescript—The name of Eliza A. Kealiher, in the judicial proceedings against her, and in the proceedings of the sale of her land is spelled in different ways, as follows: Eliza A. Kealiher, Eliza A. Keoliher, Eliza A. Kelliher, Eliza A. Kellier, Eliza A. Keohler, Eliza A. Kelhler and Eliza A. Keobbler. Held that the names are idem sonans, and sufficiently identify her. The Court holds that the date of the attachment in the officer's certificate to the registry of deeds is March 24, 1881, the same as in the return on the writ.

When, in a sale of the debtor's land on execution by an officer, the debtor resides out of the County where the land lies, and his residence is stated in the proceedings, a return by the officer that he forwarded to the judgment debtor, in this execution alike notice by mail, postage paid, is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the Statute. Under R. S., c. 76, § 12, a return by an officer on an execution that he took and sold, "all the right, title and interest which" the debtor has, is sufficient to pass all the title of the debtor to the lands described.

No tender to Willey or demand on him for an account of amount due on the mortgage was necessary, as at the time of the attachment under which the plaintiff claims, he had no interest in the mortgage which the plaintiff claims to redeem.

A Prisoner's Daring Escape.

JOHN GANNON MAKES A DESPERATE BREAK FOR FREEDOM AT LOWELL.

John Gannon, of Billerica, escaped from the Middlesex county jail at Lowell, Wednesday afternoon at about three o'clock. It was a desperate and daring feat, but it was successful. He has been in jail on a charge of breaking and entering in Billerica, and was awaiting the presentation of his case to the grand jury in June. Being a capable sort of fellow, he was employed in working about the jail, clad only in a gingham shirt, overalls and stockings, he was working in one of the corridors, cleaning up. The keeper passed by and out of the prison into the office, not locking the door. Gannon stole silently after him, his footsteps being muffled by his stockings. He slipped up the stairs leading into the tower. He escaped into the tower unseen, and noiselessly mounted the iron staircase to the fourth story, in which there are several small windows. The north window looks across a space about eight feet wide to the north wing of the jail, and the wing is joined to the tower, twenty feet below the window where Gannon stood, by a passageway having a pitched roof covered with slate. Gannon raised the window, got out upon the sill and dropped. He was seen by some fellow-prisoners, but they were mum. How he preserved his equilibrium on the slated roof of the passageway alluded to is a mystery, but directly he struck it he crept to the wing wall, now covered with woodbine, and, grasping the vines, lowered himself nimbly by them twenty feet more to the ground.

He was now in a small area in front of the jail not more than fifteen feet from Thorndike street, and in full view of frequently passing vehicles and loungers on the South Common. He was shrewd enough not to scale the iron fence that separates the jail premises from the street, but ran to the corner of a high wooden fence that separates the lawn from the jail garden, and the one separating the jail grounds from those of C. I. Hood's laboratory, and climbed to the top. The fence is at least eight feet high and set with pointed spikes three inches high. He picked his way between the spikes, now in full view of the girls in the laboratory, and jumped over, ran across the garden, scaled another fence, and jumped over into the freight yard of the Boston & Maine railroad. He picked his way between the cars and tracks into the grounds on the opposite side, and was last seen disappearing in the direction of Chelmsford street.

Lord Lonsdale's Esquimau Dogs.

FOUR ARCTIC PETS WHICH HIS LORDSHIP IS TAKING HOME TO ENGLAND.

Lord Lonsdale, along with the two tons of specimens from the northern regions, will take with him on the Celtic, from New York, four Esquimau dogs that were his constant companions in his travels. The dogs arrived from Winnipeg, in charge of William McEwan, and late the same night they were taken on board the steamer. Before they were taken aboard the steamship the dogs were visited by many curious people at the Brevoort stables, in Clinton place, where their appearance and peculiar antics furnished much amusement to the visitors.

There are four dogs, one being a sea otter and the others a mixture of Esquimau and fox. The one, "Ou-Tick-y-Witack," was the "steer dog" attached to the sled, and is a fine animal. He is two years and a half old and was bought at Katmai, by Lord Lonsdale from an Esquimau chief, the price being a tin kettle. The other three dogs, "Kylone," "Towyackte" and "Sport," were bought at Liverpool Bay, the price for the first being a knife, and for the second two small knives and a package of needles. "Sport" was a present to his lordship. The dogs, when they came into the possession of Lord Lonsdale, were of an ugly disposition. Since then, they have become quite tame, and allowed themselves to be petted and fondled by the visitors. Instead of barking they emit a growl which sounds like a cross between that of a seal and a sea lion. They are fed every third day on fish, and even this scant amount of food had resulted in making them very fat, which fact dog fanciers attributed more to the change from the cold climate than to any other cause.

A Lover's Dream.

A girl at Hackney, aged 19, with her two brothers and a younger sister, were left in charge of the house while their parents attended a funeral in the country. In the evening the girl's sweetheart called. As she was alarmed at noises which she fancied she heard, he stayed at the house all night to reassure her. During the night he dreamed that he saw the girl walk past him, beckoning him to follow. He awoke, and becoming alarmed, went into the passage. Having dressed, he went to the door of deceased's room and knocked. Receiving no answer he then awoke the others. On the bedroom door being opened deceased was found lying on the floor, with blood issuing from her mouth. From a doctor's examination it would seem that the girl died at about the time that her sweetheart dreamed she beckoned him.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE WESTERN MULE.

PECULIARITIES OF THE BURRO USED IN THE MOUNTAINS.

How They Are Broken to Pack Carrying—Strange Infatuation for Horses—Interesting, Amusing and Aggravating Characteristics.

"A man who has roughed it out among the mountains," it was said at a Broadway sales stable the other day, "remembers the mules about as well and as long as anything."

It is just about at this time, the speaker told, when asked why the mind should be particularly impressed by the familiar quadruped, that a good many are rounded up for the summer's work after being turned out all winter. As natural to expect, a mule that has had no restraint for several months is inclined to show the worst side when the hand of a would be master begins to be felt. A drove of 100 or so in a corral fresh from the plains will carry just about as much downright "cussedness" as can be found in any brute collection under the sun. The first thing is to have them shod. Such a thing as one of them consenting to the job is unknown, but frontier blacksmiths have no fear or hesitation, and in a trice the mule is tied up and ironed.

The pack mules are smaller and inferior in every way to the riding mule, except in toughness and rascality. Like Joey Bagstock, the packers are sly. Most of them are sired by Indian ponies and are born on the open plains. A wild horse is gentleness itself beside them, but as they are usually used for carrying packs their wickedness does not so much matter.

PACKING THE "CRITTER."

The first time the pack saddles are put on a young mule the excitement surpasses description. The green beast, strong and wiry, is lassoed and led into a small open space. Before he knows what it is all about a noose of the lariat around his neck is slipped over his nose; this gives him a shock, as it were, and he makes a start for liberty. But the more he pulls the tighter the pinch on his nose, so he finally gives it up and stands still.

More ropes are brought into use, and he is finally brought to have a leather blinder put over his eyes. The next step is to put the pack saddle on. The great kicking is done when the crupper is slipped under the tail. Words cannot tell the way that mule's heels flash through the air in all directions. But strategy wins and mules do tire. The pulling up of the "sinch," as the girth is called, brings out a new struggle, but it is soon over and to an extent the mule is conquered.

Mules always like company, and work especially well with a horse. With a horse on the lead they will follow steadily, and keep in the horse's company at night without attempt to wander away. They will even fight among themselves to get near a horse. At night the mules submit without moving a muscle to having the packs removed. A good roll on the grass is the first thing when relieved, and then they go to eating. At any hour of the night, if they are looked at, their noses will be seen on the ground, with their jaws industriously in motion.

"Packing" a saddle is an art in itself. In former years the Mexican sawbuck saddle was used. This invariably cut and chafed the mule's back; but now the California stuffed aparejo is the thing. This is fastened by two men, one on either side, who brace themselves with one foot against the mule's ribs and pull on the lash rope with all their might. The load is balanced properly, and the lash rope twisted and looped in a sort of network. When all is ready for the final tightening the men "give it to her." The poor mule actually groans under the pressure, but even under this tightest of tying the loads quite frequently slip out of place.

A CONTINUAL REVELATION.

The mountain mule is a continual revelation. New phases of character are continually unfolding in the most positive manner. One, for instance, will be amiable and pleasant until led up to be saddled, when all at once he will apparently be possessed of the evil spirit itself. Another will resist all attempts to saddle and pack until the others have been attended to, when he will be as docile as could be wished for. Another, perhaps used for riding, will not let a match be lighted by any one on his back without an outbreak, but will not object to smoking. Some will wade through a stream without hesitation, and another will vigorously object to wetting his feet. When in the water, if one falls down and any water gets into his big ears, he will lie and drown without a struggle. They are very private and particular about their ears, objecting to having them handled.

It is not easy to gain a mule's confidence. They are absurdly timid, and if one of a drove is scared the rest are also panic stricken. An old black log always makes a mule shy. Snakes terrify and bears paralyze them. On the plains no spurring or whipping can drive a mule up to an Indian. Take a number of mules and throw their reins over some of the others' ears and they will stand all day in the belief that they are securely tied.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Forest Restoration.

Systematic planting on a national scale must wait, and will be sure to wait, until the little remnant of our forests shall be administered economically, and at such a profit on costs of exportation as will justify the outlay required to cover costs of replanting, but meantime millions of acres of denuded forest land may be preserved from the destruction of its soil by fire, or its erosion by water, for the trifling cost of collecting and scattering the seed over their surface. The winds and the birds annually redeem thousands of acres in this way, and we need only open our eyes to the importance of their labors to realize how much may be done in the same way by systematic, intelligent effort.—Forest and Stream.

Queer Bird Nests.

Birds have some queer fancies in selecting spots for building their nests. Some time ago, near Seaville, New Jersey, I noticed in a grove of oaks, that nearly every tree had an old tin can nailed up in it. I found on examination that the cans were all occupied by wrens and bluebirds. But what attracted my attention most was an old boot fastened in one of the trees. As I approached it a bluebird flew out, and although it was twenty-five feet from the ground, I climbed up and saw inside five young birds comfortably [illegible]

I once found a [illegible] built by a pair of [illegible] in a nest in a cedar [illegible] it found [illegible] nest was constructed on top of the third one, and a fifth one on top of the fourth, before they were contented to begin housekeeping. Not long after that four little heads were peeping over the edge of their lofty home.

An old gentleman once told me that his wife, on a certain wash day, missed a lace cap that she had hung out on the line and fastened with a clothes pin. Several days afterward, when walking in his garden, he noticed something white fluttering in the branches of a cherry tree, and on examination showed that a pair of robins had taken the cap from the line and fastened it among the twigs and grass of their nest. The birds had undoubtedly pulled the cap from between the prongs of the clothes pins, for they could not otherwise have obtained it. They were left in undisturbed possession of their prize.

A pair of sparrows in Central park, New York, have regularly, for several years, built their nest and reared their young ones in the right hand of Daniel Webster's statue. But a stranger place than that has been used by a pair in Charing Cross, London, for six years past. These brave little fellows have made their home right in the mouth of a lion—but the lion is made of stone.—Philadelphia Times.

Following His Instructions.

"What are you doing, Patrick?"

"Wakin' up your husband, ma'am."

"But, why?"

"Becase it's tin o'clock, ma'am, when I was to give him the dhrops to make him shlape."—The Epoch.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

Effective Remedy

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 90 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

C. A. BOUTELLE, Editor.

All business letters should be addressed to Boutelle & Burr, and communications intended for publication should be addressed: "Editor of Whig and Courier."

SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1889.

Mugwump papers are greatly disturbed over the appointment of Mr. Hirsch, a Jew, as United States Minister to Turkey, forgetting that the present minister to that country is a Jew. The real objection of the Mugwumps to Mr. Hirsch is, of course, that he is a Republican.

Senator E. O. Wolcott, of Colorado, has consented to stump the new State of Montana this fall for the Republicans. He is considered one of the finest stump orators in the West, having eloquence, wit, persuasiveness and force. Congressman Sunset Cox will stump the State for the Democrats. He is a free trader and Mr. Wolcott is a protectionist, so that the tariff question is likely to play a large part in the contest.

The opposition press is trying to prove too much. In its news department it pictures a grand row in the Republican ranks because the President is going too slow in the matter of appointments, while the editorial columns are loaded down with articles arraigning the Administration for its alleged complete surrender to the "spoilsmen." Now it is perfectly clear that one or the other of the departments of our esteemed contemporaries is playing on the wrong string. Would it not be well for them to call a halt long enough to get in tune?

The Boston Globe having found itself tripped up by a network of facts too strong for it to break when it undertook to contradict history, now seeks to slip away from its original statement and holds that THE WHIG particularly dreads the renomination of Mr. Cleveland. On the contrary THE WHIG said of Mr. Cleveland: "He has our best wishes for his success in the convention as his pronounced free trade views will make his candidacy particularly acceptable to the Republicans, who would easily bowl him over again." The Globe should be more careful and not permit its imagination to run away with it.

Attorney General Miller has given an opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury that there is no provision of law under which National Banks can be established in Oklahoma at the present time. One of the requirements of the National banking law is that three-fourths of the directors of a new National bank shall have resided in the State, Territory or district in which the new association is to be located for at least one year preceding their election as directors. It is impossible, of course, to meet this requirement in the case of Oklahoma banks, as that Territory has been open to settlement only about a month. An effort will probably be made to secure early legislation on this subject.

The New York Evening Post complains because the Republican papers persist in making the Mugwumps uncomfortable by reminding them of Mr. Cleveland's performances when they indulged in criticism of the Administration. The Post publishes a long article under the caption "No worse than Cleveland" and closes with this somewhat remarkable statement:

> Within three months of this man's inauguration, the press of his party is reduced to such straits as to beg indulgence for him on the ground that he really is no worse than his predecessor. We do not recall a more striking confession of a new administration's failure.

For the past four years this Mugwump sheet has done little else besides sound the praises of Cleveland, but now it coolly declares that to say Mr. Harrison has lived up to his pledges quite as well as did Mr. Cleveland, the man we have been told was the greatest reformer of the age, is a "striking confession of the administration's failure." This Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde performance of the Post is certainly most amusing.

"Rejoicing for Small Cause."

The free trade organs having manifested no little gratification over recent troubles in the iron trade, the Philadelphia Inquirer says: The hearts of the free traders are glad because their arch enemy, the great protection State of Pennsylvania, appears to be in a bad way with respect to her iron business. The New York Herald, in an editorial article headed "Poor Pennsylvania," exclaims: "There has been to much protection—and now there is too much iron."

Our esteemed contemporary will pardon us if we fail to see wherein this is any cause for rejoicing. According to its own logic, if there had been too little protection there would have been too little iron, and if the free traders had been listened to and no protection established, there would have been no iron at all. Of the three, it appears to us the actual situation is rather the best—best for the country, which has had its mineral and industrial resources so greatly developed; best for the people, who have millions upon millions of dollars distributed among them through the iron works, instead of being sent abroad to buy foreign iron; best even for the unfortunate ironmasters who now find themselves caught in an adverse current of changing trade, but who have had a long period in which to gather wealth.

But the Herald thinks the tariff iniquity of the Pennsylvanians has been visited on their own heads. It continues:

> It is not English or Belgium iron, but Virginia, Tennessee and Alabama iron that our Pennsylvania friends will have to compete with hereafter, and the tariff will not help them there. Protection is a nice thing when it protects, but when it does not—what then?

The tariff was not designed to protect Pennsylvania industries alone, but American industries, and that it continues to do this the Herald's own words are evidence. It is not foreign iron that Pennsylvania has to contend with but American iron.

This is not a blow at protection, it is a fresh triumph for it. Protection built up first the iron works of Pennsylvania, then those of the West, and now those of the South; the fence does not end at Mason and Dixon's line, it incloses the whole country, and Pennsylvanians, who protested vigorously when Mr. Mills and his compatriots tried to break it down for the admission of foreign iron, have not a word to say against their starting up competitive iron works of their own.

Our Pennsylvania iron works have succumbed—so far as they have succumbed, which is not very far—to a stronger law than the tariff; the law of the survival of the fittest; which is omnipotent in business, however it may be in physiology. The Southern iron workers have improved appliances, improved methods, better natural advantages and other liberal inducements. They would not be [illegible] Americans if they did not succeed with all these things in their favor.

As for "Poor Pennsylvania," she is not a candidate for the almshouse yet. If our gleeful free trade friends will take another look at the men who are behind the booming Southern industries they will find that many of them wear faces seen before on many a protection battlefield in Pennsylvania.

A Generous Provision.

A gentleman who refuses to have his name made public proposes to help some of the poor boys in New York to obtain an education. The Tribune of Thursday says:

> A quiet looking, elderly man called at the offices of the Board of Education on Monday and told City Superintendent Jasper that he desired to give to some of the poor boys of New York an opportunity to obtain a college education. He proposed to establish for a period five years twelve scholarships for poor boys in the schools who wished to go to college. In order to enable them to do this he would give to the parents or guardians of each of the boys thus selected $250 a year to support him while he was in college.
> The speaker said that he desired to confer with Mr. Jasper in regard to this plan, as he wished him to select the boys. Yesterday Mr. Jasper received from his visitor a letter in which the plan was fully set forth. He desired that the selection should be made without favoritism, and that notice should be given at once, so that twelve boys could be chosen from those who should complete their course in the Grammar schools this spring. The President of the Board of Education, J. Edward Simmons, and James Godwin, assistant superintendent of the public schools, are named as the committee with Mr. Jasper to choose the candidates. The only condition made by the donor was that his name was not to be made public.
> "His instructions were positive in this regard," Mr. Jasper said recently, "and his name will be known only to myself. He is one of the most prominent and active men in the city. His purpose is to do this work quietly and to give to some of the poor boys of the city a chance which he would have liked himself when a boy."
> Mr. Jasper said that he had not yet decided how the selection would be made, but he thought it would be through the school superintendents. "If the experiment is a success," Mr. Jasper said, "after a few years' trial, the scholarships will be established permanently, as the donor said that he would set aside a special fund for it."

The Delsarte System.

For several years Miss Annie Payson Call has been teaching in Boston what has been called the DELSARTE SYSTEM, taking the foundation principles of that system and working them out to natural, instead of artificial ends. Miss Call applies her training especially to health, teaching how to use the body rightly in daily living; how to reserve, control and direct one's forces, and especially how to control the nerves. In other words, how to obey nature's laws. The result is the case of unconsciousness, and decided gain in health and power. Miss Call's work is becoming widely known. Miss Coombs is a pupil of Miss Call, and teaches the same system. Her address while in Bangor will be 31 Broadway.

PENOBSCOT RIVER SALMON,

Cutting up for 25 Cents to 35 Cents a Pound at Jones' Fish Market.

Our friends on the other side as they cannot compete with our prices, say that we are cutting St. John Salmon. Of course they are supposed to know more about our business than we do, and are supposed to know all about the fish business, as they have sold a little fish in connection with their business for the last two or three years. But we wish to have a few words to say about our own business. WE ARE NOT CUTTING ST. JOHN SALMON, and will not, nor never have sold St. John Salmon for Penobscot fish. If we were doing such business as that why should we have all the best of the fish business in Bangor and vicinity. It stands to reason that if we should sell our customers St. John fish for Penobscot, that it would be the last time they would buy of us, as they could tell the difference as soon as it was cooked, and if we were doing such a business as that our trade would be less every season and not more, as it is. Last season we had two teams to deliver our goods and five men to do the business; this season we have three teams and seven men. We always have and always intend to do the Fish Business in Bangor. We buy in large quantities, and everybody knows that by so doing we can buy lower than if we bought fifty or one hundred pounds at a time. We have a large wholesale trade which enables us to replenish our stock daily, and we warrant everything we sell just as represented. Buy of us and get fresher fish and at lower prices, as we do not have to hold what we have left over one Friday to sell the next, as the other self styled fish dealers do. Buy of a reliable house where you are sure of getting prime goods and not be bulldozed by our jealous friends.

THE KING OF MEDICINE—THE GREAT AMERICAN CANCER CURE.

Cancer is the cumulation in the blood of all the deadly elements known to humanity. Its malignity is unquestioned. By the old school of physicians it is called a malignant tumor and they prescribe only the knife for its cure. Never recommend anything for the blood from which the tumor originates. Hence, soon after the operation it re-appears in a more malignant form and the poor sufferer soon succumbs to the inevitable. Well may it be called the King of diseases, as death itself is called the King of Terrors. So any medicine acting through the blood that can cure such a disease ought to be called the King of Medicines, and if it can cure the King of Diseases it ought certainly to cure all lesser blood diseases such as diseases of the Skin, Carbuncles, Tumors, Bunches, Moles, Warts, etc., also Enlarged Liver, Spleen, Kidneys, Prostate Glands, etc. It will give tone to the heart quicker than any medicine known by giving pure blood for that organ to act upon. It will give sound, natural sleep, to those who are restless, nervous and wakeful, by giving healthy blood to feed the brain. It is the most perfect blood medicine known. It prepares the blood to heal all old sores, all irritated surfaces such as Catarrh, Bronchitis, Irritable Bladder, Weakness of Bowels, Piles, etc. It will kill Scrofula Humor, like pouring water on to fire; therefore Tubercular Consumption has a formidable opponent here.

CRONIN'S MURDER.

The Police Have Discovered An Important Clue.

The Place Where the Murder was Committed

CHICAGO May 24 Late this afternoon the police announced that they had all the evidence necessary to convince them that Cronin was murdered in a cottage a short distance from the home of P O Sullivan, the man whose card presented to Cronin led the latter to leave his home on the night of his disappearance The cottage belong to a man named Carlson, who lived near the same lot It appears that about seven weeks ago a young woman rented the house and paid a month's rent in advance

Persons living in the neighborhood were given to understand that the woman rented it for her brother, hired by Sullivan This adds to the suspicious circumstances, because Sullivan declared that he did not hire the men and the house remained unoccupied until about the time of Cronin's disappearance There is one uncovered blood stain in the front parlor and one in the back parlor in addition to what is supposed to have been other spots, hastily and crudely covered with paint Carlson made the discovery yesterday and informed the police

The Evidence Accumulates

To-night a detective found a new key in the room of the cottage When tried in the lock of the mysterious trunk found by the roadside the morning after Cronin disappeared the key fitted it exactly All doubt seems to be removed of the genuine connection between the prisoner Woodruff the doctor's dead body, the trunk and the blood stained cottage

A Train Thrown Down an Embankment.

Many Passengers Injured, but None Killed.

ST LOUIS Mo, May 24 The west bound train on the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad, which left St Louis last night at 8 15, was wrecked three miles west of Sullivan, Missouri, sixty-eight miles west of St Louis Not a passenger escaped unhurt. Forty five are known to be seriously injured, but no deaths are reported The train was running at a high rate of speed when the track gave way and the locomotive, baggage car and five coaches went over an embankment. The train men and those only slightly injured at once set to work to prevent a fire, in which they succeeded A temporary hospital was improvised at Sullivan and the most seriously injured taken there, and the others were brought to St Louis on a relief train The wounded are under the care of Dr McIntyre, chief surgeon of the road At 11 20, when the accident occurred,

Most of the Passengers

had gone to sleep. The accident occurred on a curve The spikes and fish plates were removed from the rail at the curve, leaving the rail loose on the ties The forward portion of the locomotive passed all right, but the tender jumped the track and was thrown part way down the embankment Who removed the spikes and plates is not known but the supposition is that the work was done by train robbers No robbers put in an appearance and if the accident was caused by them they must have weakened in their purpose or thrown the wrong train The road officials claim that it is a clear case of train wrecking

No Deaths have yet Resulted from the effects of the injuries received, although several of the injured are in a precarious condition General Manager Morrill has offered a reward of $1 000 for information which will lead to the detection of the party or parties who removed the bolts from the fish plates and caused the wreck

SENSATION IN NEW HAVEN

Crookedness by a Bank Cashier and Teller.

The Amount Involved Stated at from $50,000 to $100,000.

NEW HAVEN, May 24 John C Bradley cashier of the Merchants' National Bank is said to have been under the surveillance of the police at his residence in Fair Haven since yesterday afternoon He is charged with embezzlement The bank officials decline to give any information

The Exposure of Financial Irregularities

at the Merchants National Bank to-day created a decided sensation in business circles The facts developed to-night indicate that the bank is a heavy sufferer and the bottom of the sensation is by no means reached Several days ago the directors became suspicious that something was wrong, and after a preliminary examination of the books yesterday placed Cashier John C Bradley and Assistant Teller Charles W Palmer under police surveillance After a further investigation to-day they were held in custody by the sheriff but are not yet jailed

The Examination of the Books

showed the Cashier and Assistant Teller were involved in a system of discounting notes without submitting the paper to the Directors for approval and this practice was carried on for a number of years until the bank was pretty heavily involved The bank officials are extremely reticent and will not name the extent of the losses which are named from $50 000 to $100 000 the latter sum being generally held by business men as the correct figure Late this afternoon President Bigelow issued a card to the public saying that the bank's capital will not be impaired

It is Learned that To-day's Expose

was precipitated by the discovery of notes amounting to about $17 000 drawn by John F Bassett, a prominent wholesale and retail hardware dealer, irregularly discounted by the cashier or teller Mr Bassett secured the bank by giving a mortgage on real estate for $35 000. Other prominent merchants are mixed up in the note discounting expose The officials refuse to make the names public Teller Palmer made a full confession of all the transactions but it cannot be obtained to-night Palmer is interested in the manufacture of patent medicine

One Story Current

is that he borrowed considerable money to extend his business and being unable to meet the payments tided over by discounting notes for parties of whom he borrowed money This practice, it is stated was discovered by Cashier Bradley Palmer induced him to keep quiet, promising to take up the notes as they became due Failing to do this other notes were discounted until the Cashier and Teller were deeply involved and compelled to keep quiet for their own safety The general opinion to-night is that the affair is much worse than the bank officials care to admit Bradley is about fifty years of age and served several terms as Councilman and Alderman and is very popular He is prominent in church and military circles and stood high in business circles Palmer is about forty and has been with the bank nearly twenty years

NEW YORK.

The Broadway Railroad Boodle Cases

NEW YORK, May 24 The extraordinary session of Court of Oyer and Terminer adjourned to-day without taking any action in the cases of Thomas B Kerr against whom's score of Broadway Railroad indictments still stand Justice Daniels said he would have to preside at the trial of ex Alderman McQuade in Saratoga, and also at a murder trial in Buffalo, which would render him unavailable for a session in this city before the middle of July

Swindled Out of their Money

Over one hundred Hungarians and Poles who had deposited their savings for years with the banker Max Goldberger who, it is alleged disappeared from his office two weeks ago with $20 000 of their money, crowded around the door of the bank this morning, clamoring for admittance The doors were bolted on the inside and no admittance was gained It is believed he has fled to Canada or Hungary

The Nicaraguan Canal

NEW YORK, May 24 Steamship Alvena will sail for Greytown, Nicaragua to-morrow, with fifty men and a quantity of implements and stores for the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company, the pioneer expedition for the the commencement of the building of the Nicaraguan inter-oceanic canal

An Alleged Bogus Loan Concern

G Percival Stewart, who announced himself as Vice President of the Granite State Provident Association, with office on Broadway, New York, and home at 64 Hanover street, Manchester, N.H and two of his agents, were before the Police Court to-day for failing to turn in money collected. Goldberg and Versleoing, accused the firm and denounced Stewart as a fraud. The result was that a complaint of conspiracy was made against Stewart and his companions, J. Forker and E M Egleston, alleged that the three were trying to defraud the public by a building and loan association. The witnesses said they could never get a loan, as they would always be outbid, as they were told, by some one out west.

Much interest was added to the entertainment by the use of some new instruments The idea, which is certainly novel as well as entertaining, originated with Miss Hardy, who can be deservedly complimented upon the thorough success of the occasion

THE Y M C A BUILDING We take the following from the May number of the Y M C A Bulletin The many inquiries that come to us concerning the progress of the new building for our young men and boys, is most encouraging, for it shows how anxious the Bangor people are for the time to come when the Association will be firmly established in a building of its own adapted to its varied needs—a building that will become a part of the every day life of our city—a building that will be pointed to with pride by our business men, and will be a joy and blessing not only to the young men and boys of to-day but to the thousands that will pass this way in the future exposed to the many temptations that beset their path While our fund has not been increased since our last issue yet a number have signified their intention of contributing to it, when we decide on a location. For reasons which we cannot state now we have been unable to settle on a site, but expect before another month has gone to have decided this matter and to be well under way as to plans, etc. In the meantime we are anxious to get two more $1000 pledges, and two more $500 ones, in order that we may have ten of each, the number we find necessary when we started out to raise the money for the building. AMUSEMENTS.

Robert Downing as "St. Marc

"St Marc" was given last night as the second performance by the Downing Company to excellent advantage and met with the hearty approval of the audience which again was not of the size that it should have been With such a star and so strong a support, any play which the company might deem suitable to present could hardly fail of success and with the well constructed and interesting drama of "St Marc" upon the boards a telling effect was naturally the result. The middle ages is the time of the play, and the plot gives several excellent parts, which were in thoroughly competent hands last night Every detail was carefully looked to and it was exceedingly agreeable to the audience to witness such a production The costumes were elegant and suitable representations of the period

Mr Downing in the title role gave a very stirring interpretation of the character, and caused considerable enthusiasm in the most effective scenes The hearty applause attested the appreciation of the audience Mr Meredith as 'Capt Glamondo' was one of the strongest in the cast, and his work was such that would naturally be expected from this sterling actor, Mr Hermann's "Lorenzo' was excellently carried out

Miss Blair made a very pleasing impression as "Diarora' and Miss Tracy again demonstrated her valuable histrionic qualities in the role of "Theresa"

This afternoon Mr Downing will appear in "Ingomar" his greatest success while with Mary Anderson The play will be picturesque and original In the evening the play will be 'Spartacus for which role Mr Downing is peculiarly adapted Large audiences should attend

ANOTHER'S CRIME.

FROM THE DIARY OF INSPECTOR BYRNES.

By JULIAN HAWTHORNE, Author of "The Great Bank Robbery," "An American Penman," Etc.

[Copyright by O. M. Dunham, and published, through special arrangement by the American Press Association, with Cassell & Co., New York and London.]

"Good or bad," returned Mr. Clifton, "it happened just as I tell it you. When Mr. Valentine said that, the lady seemed staggered for a moment; and then all at once she called out: 'I see how it is!! You two have arranged this thing between you! You are in a conspiracy to cheat me! You have plotted to get hold of this property and share it between you, and keep me out! But I will have my rights in spite of you! I will denounce both of you to the authorities. For all I know, you may have murdered my husband and taken his papers. But you will not succeed; I will expose you, and you shall be punished!'

"Well, that made me a little angry, and I told her that if she wanted to charge me with conspiracy she had better set about it at once, and the sooner the better, for I knew who would get the worst of it. As for Mr. Valentine, he didn't lose his temper, but he said very quietly, 'I am not a murderer, madam, and you will only waste your time in trying to prove me such. But I can assure you that, if I am not your husband—and I certainly am not—no such person exists in the world. Neither can you sustain the charge that I am aiming—either in combination with Mr. Clifton or alone—to keep you out of this property. I told him a week ago, before you arrived in Mexico, that I would have nothing to do with it, and to that determination I shall adhere. The utmost you can attempt to do is to show that I am not Mr. Valentine, and that you are welcome to attempt. But I warn you beforehand that all the evidence is on my side, and that you will fail. I advise you to go back whence you came, and to give up any idea of ever becoming a great English lady. Meanwhile, I have the honor to wish you good morning!'

"He bowed to her as polite and cool as you please, and walked out of the patio and I followed him. 'What in the name of wonder does all this mean?' I asked him.

"'Really, Mr. Clifton,' said he, 'I can give you no explanation. You have heard the whole conversation, and you must draw your own conclusions from it, as I do mine. If you believe that that lady is the wife, or the widow, of the Mr. Valentine who has inherited the estate, you are at liberty to act in accordance with your conviction. The most difficult thing will probably be to make other people believe as you do.'

"'That's all right, Mr. Valentine,' said I, 'but there is one thing you can tell me. You said just now that you had heard speak of that lady before, and the inference was that what you had heard was not to her credit. Now what did you mean by that?'

"'Well, Mr. Clifton,' said he, 'perhaps I may have heard of her before, or perhaps I may be mistaken in thinking I had; but I don't see why the inference to be drawn is necessarily a bad one. At all events, she has never done me any harm, and I don't believe she ever will or can; and I have no present intention of harming her, either by word or deed. As I said before, you must follow your own judgment; as for me, what I have said I stick to, and nothing will change me.' By that time we had got to the door of the office of the secretary of the interior, who was a friend of his, and he went in and left me in the street to do my own thinking."

"Well, and what was the upshot of it all?" inquired Mr. Stapleton.

"It isn't ended yet," Mr. Clifton replied; "but from facts that subsequently came to my knowledge I came to the conclusion that I might learn something by coming on to New York."

"Now that I think of it, it's growing a little chilly, too," rejoined Mr. Stapleton, "and as the governor of South Carolina once remarked to the governor of North Carolina, 'it's a long time between drinks.' I have some acquaintance with the head steward on board this boat; suppose we go down stairs?"

Apparently Mr. Clifton accepted this suggestion; for when, a few minutes later, the bearded gentleman pulled open his blind, the two camp stools were vacant.

CHAPTER XIX.

IN A CARRIAGE.

JUDGE KETELLE and his young wife took up their abode in a house not far from the southern boundary of Central Park, taking Mrs. Nolen to live with them. The wedding aroused considerable interest in New York city, the beauty and accomplishments of the bride being almost as well known as the forensic and judicial ability of her husband. The newly married couple did not entertain, however, owing to the recent domestic misfortunes which had overtaken Mrs. Ketelle's family; they received a few friends very quietly and informally, and made scarcely any calls. The judge had not been on the bench for some years previous to his marriage; but he had a large and important practice as a barrister, and he now devoted himself to this with more assiduity than ever. Report had it that he and his wife were very happy together, and though some people admired the judge's intrepidity in venturing to appropriate a lady so beautiful and so much his junior, there was nothing in their relations to indicate that his choice had not been as prudent as it certainly was enviable.

The wedding had taken place about the first of October, on the return of the Nolens and Judge Ketelle from the seaside; and after a short honeymoon they settled in their new dwelling early in November. The judge attended to business down town every day; his wife spent her mornings at home, and in the afternoons, was fond of driving out in the park in her brougham, occasionally accompanied by her mother, but more often alone. The weather was cold but very fine, and the hue of the autumn leaves was unusually beautiful. But those who happened to see the face of the young wife at the window of her brougham forgot all about the autumnal foliage and had their thoughts filled with the memory of another kind of loveliness.

One afternoon, while passing the children's play ground, Mrs. Ketelle caused the coachman to stop his horses in order that she might watch the little creatures at their games, for nothing pleased her more than the spectacle of children having a good time.

After remaining a few minutes, she was about to give the order to move on, when her attention was attracted to a gentleman who was standing with his back partly turned towards her in a foot-path that here approached the carriage. He was tall and well made; he wore a thin dark [illegible]

Why was it that the sight of this man produced so strange and powerful an impression upon her? She asked herself this question, but could give no satisfactory answer. Surely he was not an acquaintance of hers! And yet there was something about him that not only arrested her gaze but sent a thrill to her heart, as if particles of ice and fire were being driven through it. Her hands became cold and her teeth chattered, and yet her cheeks were burning and drops stood on her forehead.

The gentleman turned slowly to resume his walk. As his face came more fully into view Mrs. Ketelle caught her breath with a sharp sound, and her fingers grasped the frame of the door convulsively. She could not cry out; her lips were parched and her tongue dry. But her whole soul went out to him through her eyes. Was it a dream? Was he a phantom? Could she be deceived by some marvelous resemblance? Oh, would he pass on without seeing her and vanish forever!

He had, in fact, walked on several paces, and in another minute he would be out of reach. But either accident or one of those mysterious mental impressions which many persons have experienced in some epoch of their lives caused him suddenly to pause, turn about, and look directly at the face in the carriage window. Their eyes met for a moment; then the woman covered her face with her hands, and sank back in her seat with a breathless cry of terror, bewilderment and intolerable joy.

The gentleman, who also seemed pale and agitated, came over to the road and laid his hand on the carriage door. "Drive on!" he said to the coachman, and with the words he entered the carriage and closed the door after him. Then he pulled down the shades over the windows. The coachman spoke to his horses, and they moved on.

This episode had taken place in a short space of time, and with very little visible manifestation of feeling on either side. Nevertheless, it had not entirely escaped observation. Two men had been sauntering along the path side by side, apparently whiling away the hour or two that separated them from dinner. One of them was a tall, slender, graceful fellow, with sharp but well molded features, black hair and mustache, and a pair of restless black eyes. He was dressed quietly, in dark colors, and yet there was a certain jauntiness in his appearance that suggested the sporting man or the sharper. His companion was a considerably older man, and his face was of a much coarser cast; his clothes were new, but fitted him ill, and he wore a flashy necktie and watch chain. His small gray eyes had noted the little occurrence above described, and as the carriage rolled away he nudged his friend with his elbow.

"Well, what now?" said the latter.

"Did you see that?"

"What?"

"Well, your wits are wool gathering it seems. Did you see that fellow get into that carriage?"

"What carriage?"

"That carriage that was standing here just now with the lady in it. Why, what's got into you, Horrie? Don't you know who she was?"

"No, I don't. How should I?"

"Well, you might find it money in your pocket some day, that's all. Swell women like that don't drive out alone in the park for nothing, I reckon! And may be, rather than have their husbands know what they're after, they might see their way to paying an obliging person a consideration to keep his mouth shut."

"Oh, stuff! That business is played out. The swells are on to it, and the first word that's said they ring the bell for the police. I don't want any of that in mine, thank you! And if you want any one to believe you know all the ladies that drive in the park in their own broughams, you must find some greener hand than I am."

"I know who she was, just the same," retorted the other. "She's the girl that married that fellow Ketelle, a month ago."

"She?—the sister of that"— He stopped.

"The sister of Jerrold Nolen! You remember him, if I ain't mistaken," said the short man, with a chuckle.

"Yes, I remember him; and when the accounts are evened up I'll remember you too, Jack Grush, and don't you forget it!" exclaimed the black haired man, with a sullen fierceness. The fellow he had called Grush laughed but made no reply. "So that was his sister, was it?" the other went on, muttering to himself; "and she's married to the judge a month ago, and taking fellows to drive in her brougham!" He twisted the ends of his mustache, and switched the toe of his boot, as he sauntered along, with the light cane he carried.

Let us follow Mrs. Ketelle's carriage.

After the first few minutes of speechless and wild emotion were passed, Pauline relinquished her brother's hand, and shrank away from him to her side of the carriage. A reaction of feeling had come over her. She felt a sort of indignation that she should have been all these months grieving for a calamity that had never happened.

"Why did you never let us know that you were alive?" she demanded.

"I put it off from day to day," he said. "I had not decided, at first, what to do. I thought of coming home, then. I thought that since I had been reported dead it was better to let it be believed so for a time, until the truth about the robbery should be discovered. Besides, I knew that detectives would be after me, and I feared that a letter addressed to you or to the judge might betray me. At last when I found something to do I decided to wait until I was certain of success before communicating with you. And finally, circumstances led to my coming back here unexpectedly myself."

"But Valentine might have written, if you could not."

"Valentine! Why, Pauline, don't you know—don't you see—it was Valentino who was drowned!"

"Valentine! Oh, God forgive me! how I have wronged him!" She turned aside and rested her face against the side of the carriage and sobbed for a few moments passionately. But she was never one to be long mastered by emotion. She forced back her tears, and said: "Tell me, tell me all!"

"The whole affair came about by an accident, without any prearrangement at all. When I went down to the pier of the steamship, Val had suggested my making one or two alterations in my dress and appearance, so that if any one were on the lookout for me I should pass for Valentine. Afterwards, on the steamer, we found that people were giving us each other's names, and we let it be so. We occupied the same state room, and I used his things—I had brought very little of my own with me.

"On the voyage he told me all his private history; I afterwards thought that if he had been consciously training me to personate him he could not have done it more effectually. Then came the day of the hurricane. We were close together all the time until within a few minutes of the time the wind changed. We were in the cabin; there was a lantern burning, but it was almost quite dark. Val left me and went to our room. I could see him there; he seemed to be writing on something that he held up before him. Afterwards he went towards the steward's room, holding on by the iron pillars of the cabin as he went. [illegible]

[illegible] her heart. "It was he—he did not forget—I might have known it!"

"What might you have known?" asked her brother.

"Nothing; go on. When you found that he was dead what then?"

"We had agreed before to go to Mexico. He had letters and papers; I took them, and went traveling as Valentine Martin. I saw that in that way I should get a standing in the place which I could not have obtained for myself, and that the report of my death would throw off the police. I was cordially received in Mexico, and put in the way of doing some valuable business. Everything prospered with me, as it had never done before. The story is too long to tell fully now; but in the midst of my success an extraordinary thing occurred; an English agent of the Martin estate came over and told me—supposing me to be Valentine—that by my brother's death I was the heir. I did not wish to enter into explanations, so I simply told him that I did not want the estate, and that it might go to the next of kin. I had forgotten that Val had a wife, though, of course, I knew all about her. She had ruined his life in more ways than one, and was no better than she should be; but if his death were known she would be entitled to a share of the estate. It seems she had got wind of the English agent's business, and had followed him from New Zealand. I had a curious interview with her; she charged me finally with having made away with her husband in order by personating him to get his property, and treating my assertion that I was not going to touch the property as mere buncombe. But the next day I got a letter from her in which she actually offered, in case I would make common cause with her, to go to England, prove her marriage to Valentine, get the estate and then divide with me!"

"Poor Valentine!" murmured Pauline, with a trembling lip.

"When I refused she declared war, and said she would expose me as an impostor and probable murderer. She learned that I was manager and part owner of a valuable mine that I had discovered near Pachuca. The other owners were two high officers of the government. She went to them with her story. They told me what she had said. I had already made up my mind what to do; I gave them the whole history of what had happened since Valentine and I had left New York; I told them what he had told me about his wife, and then I showed them the letter she had just written me. I knew I was risking everything in making a clean breast of it, but the fact was I was tired of living under a name that did not belong to me, and I wanted to put an end to it at all hazards."

"I am glad of that!" said Pauline.

"They were rather upset by the story, and for a while I thought the affair would go against me. But I suspect they [illegible] tered me too useful a man to lose, [illegible] making a great deal of money for [illegible] and doing all the work, and then [illegible] oman's letter tipped the beam. [illegible] said finally that they would accept [illegible] what I was if I could give them [illegible] ctory proof that I was what I de[illegible] myself to be. Let me show letters and vouchers from reputable persons, [illegible] York bearing out my account of [illegible] and they would accept me as a [illegible] alvalent for what I had pretended [illegible] I had a power of attorney that [illegible] I given me on the steamer, but of [illegible] I could not tell them what had [illegible] my leaving New York. I could [illegible] sk any one here for a certificate of [illegible] aracter until my name had been [illegible] of the charge against it. But it [illegible] 't do to hesitate, so I said, on the [illegible] the moment, that I would go to [illegible] ork, get the evidence they required and return to them with it. So [illegible] m; but I overheard some conversation [illegible] oming down on the boat between [illegible] llsh agent and a New York de[illegible] which made it seem probable [illegible] y affairs will be investigated [illegible] r I like it or not, and that meantime [illegible] true story of how the robbery [illegible] mitted has not been revealed [illegible] ow is it?"

[illegible] nswer to this question led to a [illegible] versation, in the course of which [illegible] arned all that had happened during [illegible] absence, including Pauline's marriage. The search for the thief for whose [illegible] had suffered had as yet met with [illegible] s, but it was still being carried [illegible] fter discussing the matter, it was decided that Percy's presence in the city should, for the moment, be kept a secret from every one, even from his mother and Judge Ketelle. He should conceal himself in lodgings in the upper part of the town, where Pauline could visit him from time to time, and report the progress of affairs, and learn, if possible, from Inspector Byrnes, what were the object and result of the English agent Clifton's mission to New York. There might be difficulties in the way, but the brother and sister were young and believed that the longest lane has a turning.

It was late when Pauline drove up to the door of her house, and, alighting, walked up the steps of the porch. Her mind was full of her brother, and she did not notice the tall man with the black mustache who stood on the corner of the street tapping his boot with his cane.

GOING OUT AND COMING IN.

Going out to buy us clothing,
Going out, the bills to pay;
Coming in so very slowly,
Coming in each working day;
Going out from us so easy,
Coming in, so hard to win,
Ceaseless stream of little pennies
Going out and coming in.

Through the many wants of home life,
From beneath our humble cot;
To the butcher and the baker
Where the meat and bread are bought.
From the old and much worn wallet,
To the cruel world of greed;
Going out with sighs and sadness,
To supply each family need.

Through the wants that crowd us daily,
Through the bills that must be met,
Through the many needs of children,
Where the family's growing yet,
To the busy world about us,
With its heartless woe and sin,
Restless stream of little pennies,
Rushing out into the din.

Coming back so very slowly,
Though we try to toil and save;
Coming to the dear old homestead,
Coming in to keep us brave;
Weary, are we very often,
Weary, when we try to win,
From the world the little pennies,
Which are slow in coming in.

Going out to pay the taxes,
Coming in our hearts to cheer,
Going out to pay for schooling,
Coming in to family dear;
Ceaseless stream of little pennies,
Which we find so hard to win,
From the doorways of the homestead,
Going out and coming in.

—Portland Transcript.

Cultivation of Boys.

There are as a rule plenty of boys on the farm, but, as the Iowa State Register said recently, their cultivation is frequently sadly neglected. They are not cultivated in a way to make them contented and successful farmers. The fathers of the boys on the farms do not sufficiently take them into their confidence, to consult them about all of the farm operations and give them to feel they are partners in all that is done. The father should also, when he sells his hogs, cattle, horses, or any of the crops, sit down with his boys and tell all about the sale, the amount received, and compare the cost and profit of one class of farming over the other. Show them by figures what it costs to raise wheat and corn, as well as what amount of corn and grass each animal eats during his life and what each brought in the market. In this way boys will be cultivated into thinking, intelligent farmers, instead of mere drudges.

Then the boys should be consulted what to do with the money received from the crop that their joint labor has produced. The father can point out to them what debts have to be paid, what the necessities of the family for food and clothing will require, and how the balance shall be invested—whether in buying more land, laying a foundation for improved breeds of stock, and what it shall be. In this way report all of the operations, the same as you would to partners in business. They are partners, and they should be made to feel that they are truly partners in the work, and partners in directing all of the operations of the farm.

Some Dates of Easter Sunday.

Thomas Cunningham, of this place, who is a corresponding member of the Numismatic and Archæological society, of New York, possesses, among his many other "curios," a complete file of Phinney's Almanac from 1803 to 1887, inclusive, the publication of which was stopped in 1887. In looking over them one is struck by the variety of dates on which Easter Sunday occurs, every day in the month of April being represented except the last five. Throughout the file it occurs five times on the 19th and five times on the 16th of April; four times on each the 1st, 2d, 11th and 12th of April, and four times on the 31st of March; three times on the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 13th, 14th and 22d of April and the 27th and 28th of March; April 25, 1886, being the latest and March 22, 1818, the earliest dates on which it occurs. Eight dates in March are represented, viz.: 22d, 23d, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 30th and 31st.—Utica Herald.

The Cigarettes.

The ingenuity of the women of London and Paris in inventing new dissipation is without limit. To the morphine habit the devotees of sensationalism have now added the practice of smoking tea cigarettes. Special grades of the finest tea are used, and the effect of the cigarettes is said to be delightful for fully an hour after one has been smoked. After that comes the reaction in the form of a nervous trembling and excitability, but which is subdued, according to a woman of title, who rather goes in for all these things, by a thimbleful of frozen absinthe. Thus by industriously ringing the changes on morphine, tea, cigarettes and absinthe, with a few intrigues, some scandal and a raft of white hot French novels, the woman of society manages to worry through the day. I wonder if the American girl's great success abroad is not due to her naturalness and health.—London Cor. Philadelphia Ledger.

A Snake Vein.

What was known as the Sullivan Falls mine is now only marked by a pile of broken rock; but in the days when men's brains were fired by the glittering prospects of untold wealth it seemed a bonanza and assumed corresponding proportions. Ground was broken there in winter, and the first thing that was struck by the prospectors after going down through the frost was a vein of—snakes! And such snakes! There were tiny infant snakes that had just been ushered into this sinful world; there were hoary headed old grandfathers, and uncles and cousins, and aunts! There were black snakes, and green snakes, and yellow snakes, and every color of the rainbow, snakes! There were thousands in the colony. It wasn't a very good paying vein; but some of the Maine gold mines didn't pan out so well as this, even.—Lewiston Journal.

Congenial Company.

Mabel—There goes Mr. Gocasy with that dissipated Jack Lushington; they seem inseparable nowadays.

Alice—Yes; they do seem like fast friends.—Harvard Lampoon.

Building a House in Samoa.

The negotiations between the skilled and wily carpenter and the prospective Samoan house owner would amuse, but hardly meet the approval of the business man of today. Under the propitiating influence of kava, the necessary presents are produced to induce the carpenter to undertake the construction of a house. It is begun at once, without any formal agreement, and the work advances [illegible] the good name or the unfortunate owner, who, at the time of its beginning, not knowing what may be the ideas of the carpenter as to the cost of its construction, must either call upon the community for aid, which is generally freely extended, or suffer the humiliation of this unfinished monument.—Century.

A Shark Killed by Tobacco.

In a short time we had caught a nice mess of small snappers, from ten to thirty inches long, and we were having a real good time. We had not fished very long, however, before a large shark put in an appearance and stopped our sport. We first knew of his presence by his greedily snapping off the fish from one of my neighbor's lines, having followed it up from the bottom. He executed this performance several times, and then the snappers stopped biting entirely. Not even a nibble could we get, so we hauled in our lines and commenced to pay our attentions to the shark.

He was a monstrous fellow about fifteen feet long, and he kept swimming round and round the vessel, sometimes on top of the water and sometimes down deep below us, but always at a respectful distance. His reddish brown body could be plainly seen through the clear transparent green water, and you may be sure that he was the cynosure of all eyes. A great many plans for his capture were discussed, but none appeared practicable within our limited means. The engineer suggested that if the shark would give him time he would forge a proper hook and chain, but as the shark was unable to give him a guarantee he abandoned the project.

While we were thus talking, I noticed the native pilot every now and then throwing overboard one of the snappers we had so recently caught, and as the current carried it a little distance clear of the vessel the shark would gobble it down, and, in fact, the intervals were so regular that Mr. Shark seemed impatient when the regularity was broken by a little delay. We saw that our pilot had some ultimate object in view and it drew our attention to him. As he was born and raised on this coast and had probably served his pilot's apprenticeship as a fisherman, he knew how to deal with his inveterate foe, the shark.

After having thrown over ten small fish he selected another a little larger than the others and, with a stick of wood rammed a roll of chewing tobacco, nearly as large as a man's hand, down into its belly and pressed its throat together again. He held it ready to throw, and as the shark came up, anxiously looking for his fish, he tossed it to him, and as it barely touched the water the shark turned over on its back and sucked it in. The shark then swam off as usual to the side of the vessel and then below us, and was apparently rising again in expectation of another fish when the nicotine commenced its work. His struggles and contortions were terrible to behold, as he darted here and there in a blind rage and vomiting blood, but as he swam or was carried by the current away from us his struggling grew gradually less until it ceased altogether. The tobacco had killed him.—Forest and Stream.

Contented.

"Our content is our best having," says Shakespeare; but it is only the few who really know what the word means. There is an old lady, however, living in a quiet New England town, who is actually a contented woman. One day she was sitting in the porch, placidly knitting, when a book agent appeared. After finishing the business part of his interview, and inducing her to subscribe for "Scenes from Joppa," in twelve numbers, he remarked:

"Nice farm you've got here."

"Yes, we think so," said the old lady, taking up her knitting again.

"Must be lonesome in winter, though."

"Oh, no, not too lonesome; I don't like to have it so lively you can't hear yourself think."

"I guess the wind whistles some through these trees, about the time of the equinoctial."

"Maybe it does, I won't say it don't; but it only makes me thankful we've got enough fire wood."

"How is it about books? I don't suppose you have a library in town?"

"Well, no, not to call a library," said she, cautiously, not wishing to hear her native place disparaged; "but there's books in circulation. Miss Miles has got 'Pilgrim's Progress,' and I've got 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' So once a year we swap."

"Have any lectures or concerts?"

"Husband says there's good speakin' in caucus, some of it real violent; and if you want to hear singin', sir, you just come into our Sunday school. Sometimes it fairly makes the tears come into my eyes, to hear them little creatur's tune up."

"Well, well," said the book agent, "I've seen a good many folks that call themselves contented, but I don't think one of 'em could come up to you. Shut up in this lonesome place, and making the best of it, too! Why, I don't suppose you ever travel?"

"Oh yes," said the old lady, primly, not too well pleased at hearing herself praised at the expense of her beloved town, "we travel as much as most folks. Last summer we went six miles to camp meeting, and two years ago we went to Boston—and, that's forty-five miles, sir!"—Youth's Companion.

Propelling Trains on Up Grades.

In order to secure the traction necessary to propel trains up the steep grades in the mountainous districts of the eastern and western states, it is necessary to employ very large and heavy engines—in many cases two and more—entailing thereby very heavy expense. A mechanical engineer of Albany, N. Y., has invented a device which has been practically demonstrated to secure the "tractional effort" necessary without the use of additional or "heavy weight" engines. A third rail is laid in the center of the track of the standard size and weight. Affixed under the locomotives are two wheels in a nearly horizontal position which runs along the sides of the top of the rail, and in action grip it more or less tightly.—New York Telegram.

Wright Burke, of Troup county, Ga., has been married fifteen years and has fourteen children, twins five times, triplets once, and one solitary alone.

A Glimpse of Tad Lincoln.

Both the steward and the cook had remonstrated with "Master Tad" upon bringing into the kitchen of the White House "such squads of poor, dirty, hungry [illegible] to be fed," and at last [illegible] said that Mrs. Lincoln [illegible] just crossing the yard, with head bowed, eyes to the ground, talking earnestly to Mr. Seward as they walked to the department of state together. He cried out to him at once:

"Father, father! can't I bring those poor, cold, hungry boys home with me whenever I want to? Isn't it our kitchen?"

By this time Tad had his father by the hand, who stopped short to listen to the frantic appeal.

"Can't I give them a good warm dinner today, say! They're just as hungry as bears, and two of 'em are the boys of a soldier, too!—and, father, I'm going to discharge Peter this minute if he don't get out the meat and chicken and pies and all the things we had left yesterday. Say, mayn't I! Isn't it our kitchen, father!"

Secretary Seward was shaking with laughter. Mr. Lincoln turned to him with a twinkle:

"Seward, advise with me. This case requires diplomacy."

Mr. Seward patted Tad on the back and said he must be careful not to run the government in debt, and the president took Tad's little brown hands in his own big one, and with a very droll smile bid him to "run along home and feed the boys," and added:

"Tell Peter that you are really required to obey the Bible by getting in the maimed and the blind, and that he must be a better Christian than he is!"

In less than an hour, Mr. Seward said they passed through the yard on their way to the cabinet meeting, and no less than ten small boys were sitting with Tad on the lower steps, cracking nuts and having a "State Dinner."

Mr. Lincoln remarked that the "kitchen was ours."—Wide Awake.

EDISON'S FIRST BANK CHECK.

He Was Very Much Afraid of Being Held Up and Robbed in Wall Street.

The other day a smooth faced man, wearing handsome clothes and displaying a soiled collar and a necktie all awry, and shoes that never experienced the skillful manipulations of a bootblack, and finger nails that never experienced a manicure, leaned his elbow on a Washington counter and talked in the jolliest way to a circle of newspaper friends. He looked like a tramp, but he really is one of the most famous men in the world, and his name is known in every part of the globe. Of course he is an Ohio man. His name is Thomas Alva Edison, and he was once a peanut boy and news butcher on a jerkwater railroad in the Buckeye state. During a little luncheon Edison, between hearty drinks of beer, his favorite beverage, told in his quaint way the story of his first acquaintance with any large sum of money. It was in the days when he was struggling along with his early inventions, and didn't have big capitalists to back him. In fact, he didn't have any bank account himself, and hardly knew what one was. Bank checks were things he never had occasion to use, and had about as much idea of their value as the man in the moon.

Edison had finally sold his patent on the gold and stock indicator to the Western Union Telegraph company for $40,000, and was coming over to New York to get his money.

He had heard of Wall street and its bulls and bears, and had been told that it was full of "sharks," who would fleece a man "very quick." So he made up his mind that Wall street was a very dangerous place, and that if ever he had occasion to go there he would be lucky if he got away without losing his overcoat and umbrella.

At that time Gen. Lefferts was president of the Western Union. One morning Edison came into the company's general offices to close up the sale of his patent. After a few preliminaries he was given a check for $40,000.

He looked at it curiously for a moment or two, and appeared to be puzzled what to do with it. He knew he had sold a patent to the Western Union company for $40,000, but he did not see any money. Observing his perplexity, Gen. Lefferts told him that if he would go the Bank of America, in Wall street, he would get the check cashed. "So I started," said Edison, "after carefully folding up the check, and went toward Wall street. So uncertain was I in regard to that way of doing business that I thought while on the way that if any man should come up to me and offer me two crisp thousand dollar bills for that piece of paper, I should give him up the check very quick."

On arriving at the Bank of America he hesitated about entering, fearing still that something might be wrong. At last, however, he mustered up courage and determined to try it. He knew that Gen. Lefferts had told him he would get his money here, so braced ahead and half tremblingly shoved his check out to the cashier.

The latter scrutinized it closely, gave Edison a piercing glance, and said something which Edison could not understand, as he was hard of hearing.

That was enough. He was now more than ever convinced that his "check" wasn't "worth" $40,000, and again thought as he rushed out of the bank with it that any man who would give him $2,000 could walk away with the check.

He hurried back to the Western Union and said he couldn't get any money. Gen. Lefferts then sent a man with him to identify him. He said: "This man is Mr. Thomas A. Edison, to whose order the check is drawn."

"Why, certainly, Mr. Edison," said the cashier, very obsequiously; "how would you like your $40,000—in what shape?"

"Oh, any way to suit the bank, it doesn't make any difference to me, so long as I get my money."

Edison was given $40,000 in large bills. After dividing the roll into two wads of $20,000 each, he stuffed one into each trousers pocket, buttoned up his coat as tightly as possible, and made a break to get out of Wall street as quick as he could. The next day Edison began work on his first laboratory in New York.—F. D. Mussey in Cincinnati Commercial.

Monkeys as Pets.

Easier to keep because not so restless, and naturally not so intelligent, are the tiny monkeys a few inches in length, and marmosets, smaller than all. The most charming one I ever saw was attached to the dress of a lady by a light gold chain. He sat on her shoulder or her arm, and when alarmed climbed up her parasol handle and took refuge among the supports, [illegible] the steel [illegible] was the [illegible] in this part of [illegible] appetite, and will have what they like or starve. They usually accept fruits, especially bananas and apples. Sometimes they will eat potato and bread and rice. Many of them are fond of coffee, lemonade, milk and other of our drinks. None of this family can safely be kept in the house with birds—that is with safety to the birds.—Olive Thorne Miller in Home Maker.

It was a quiet Sunday afternoon, and she was reading to him the Proverbs of Solomon. He was rapidly getting an attack of temporary oblivion.

"Aren't they wonderful, George?" she said.

"Yes, indeed," he replied; "if he had only misspelled his words, what a Josh Billings he would have made."—True Flag.

JUSTICE WITHOUT LAW.

A Judge in Tucson Who Sent All Offenders to the Rock Pile.

Capt. Bourke, of the army, is an interesting story teller, and possesses a rich fund of reminiscence and anecdote.

"Twenty years ago," said the captain, "I was in Tucson. No place was ever worse governed. Outlaws abounded and they did about as they pleased. Finally the good citizens of the place—merchants and men of property—determined to bring about a reform, and the way they decided to do it was to elect a judge who would deal honestly with the scalawags who were running the town and corrupting the courts. So they chose a man named 'Charlie' Meyers to be judge. 'Charlie' was a druggist, who knew nothing about law, but he was perfectly honest, and that was the only qualification the citizens desired. Accordingly, 'Charlie' set up a law dispensary in the same building with his drug shop, and dealt out justice and patent medicines with equal grace. In his court he established a library of calf bound books, consisting chiefly of the Materia Medica and Somebody on Fractured Bones. He engaged, as an officer of the court a man who was afraid of nothing or nobody—old 'Jimmy' Douglas, who carried in his leg a bullet that he had picked up at Gettysburg, and who walked with some difficulty and with a peculiar, though not graceful limp. The first thing that 'Charlie' did was to establish a chain gang and sentence to various terms in its service every offender that was brought before him. The shyster lawyers who had 'run' the town before 'Charlie's' incumbency protested against this as a violation of the constitution of the United States, but they protested in silence. In fact, the protest was useless. The process of the judge was rather summary, but the result was very gratifying to the good citizens of Tucson. The wild, rough characters who had ruled the town were now engaged in cleaning the streets, and Tucson was seeing an era of prosperity that it had not known since its foundation. But if the business men were pleased, the lawyers were proportionately disgusted. The court refused to recognize them and their business was gone. One day, however, one of them plucked up spirit enough to go before the court in behalf of his client and demanded a trial by jury. The court was about to sentence the prisoner to a term in the chain gang, when the lawyer interposed a demurrer. 'My client,' he said, 'objects to being tried by this court, on the ground of prejudice, and demands to be tried by jury.'

"'By shury,' said Charlie, 'What is dot shury?'

"'He demands,' said the lawyer, 'to be tried by his peers!'

"'Oh, he does, does he?' said Charlie. 'Vell I sendence him to two veeks in the shain gang and I sendence you to one veek. Now how you like dot trial by shury?' and into the chain gang the lawyer went and there he stayed until his term was up.

"One day a man named Wolf was brought before the court for cheating some Indians out of $3. He was an unscrupulous man, but a shrewd one and he knew all the tricks of the law. 'Charlie' felt that in his case the Materia Medica was not sufficient authority and so he adjourned the court to get an opportunity to consult some books on the law or to obtain advice from somebody with a knowledge of it. As he declared the case postponed and the court adjourned, however, he turned to the prisoner and said: 'Volf, it is de unanimous opinion of dis community dot you are a —— tief and this court coincides fully in dot opinion.'

"Wolf lost color and raising his fist he said: 'Judge, I don't let any one speak to me in that way.'

"'Dis court fines you $10 for raising your fist against it,' said Charlie, 'and you stands committed to do shain gang until it is paid.'

"Wolf knew that there was no recourse and he reluctantly paid the $10. The judge gravely took it and after dividing $5 between himself and 'Jimmy' Douglas, he gave $5 to the Indians. And to this day, in the annals of that Indian tribe, 'Charlie' Meyers is the most righteous judge that ever held court, for did they not sue for $3 before him and recover $5!"—Washington Telegram.

The Congressional Record.

The several thousand non-paying and half dozen paying subscribers to that especial journal, The Congressional Record, now miss its neatly cut and bound pages from their morning mail. It is noteworthy that up to its dying day The Congressional Record was full of speeches, some of which were "delivered" in senate or house two months before, and "held for revision." The veteran statesman nearly always lets his remarks go in the manner in which they are caught by the official stenographer; the amateur statesman not only wants to revise his speeches, but to read the proof before The Record is put to press. Senator Cullom often laughs at the rather ridiculous zeal displayed by himself when he was a member of the freshman class in the house. That was just twenty-four years ago. The then Representative Cullom had made a big speech on the polygamy question, and he determined to see that speech to press. At the old Globe office he was told the proof would be ready at 2 o'clock in the morning. At 2 o'clock he was told he would have to wait until 3, and at 3 his pulse quickened as the proof of his first congressional speech was placed in his hands. He spent a half hour over the proof, and was unable to find any errors, typographical or others. The foreman was calling loudly for the proof so the forms could be put on the press, and the young congressman was determined to find an error of some sort to repay him for his all night vigil. Finally, in a [illegible] of desperation he [illegible] out a whole sentence [illegible] [illegible] about [illegible] [illegible] This done, and, with [illegible]

UNTO THE LEAST OF THESE.

O children s eyes unchildlike! Children s eyes
That make pure, hallowed age seem young indeed—
Wan eyes that on clear horrors daily feed
Learned deep in all that leaves us most unwise
Poor wells, beneath whose troubled depths Truth lies,
Drowned, drowned, alas! So does my sad heart bleed
When I remember you so does it plead
And strive within my breast—as one who cries
The torture of her first born—that the day
The long bright day seems thicker sown for me
With eyes of children than the heavens at night
With stars on stars. To watch you is to pray
That you may some day see as children see
When man, like God, hath said, "Let there be light."

Dear Christ, Thou hadst Thy childhood ere Thy cross
These, bearing first their cross, no childhood know
But, aged with toil, through countless horrors grow
To age more horrible. Rough locks atoss
Above drink reddened eyes, like Southern moss
That drops its tangles to the marsh below
No standard dreamed or real by which to show
The piteous completeness of their loss
No rest, no hope, no Christ the cross alone
Borne on their backs by day their bed by night,
Their ghastly plaything when they pause to weep,
Their threat of torture do they dare to moan
A darkness ever dark across their light,
A weight that makes a waking of their sleep.

Father who countest such poor birds as fall,
Come Thou these children fallen from their place
Lift and console them of Thy pity's grace,
And teach them that to suffer is not all
Hedge them about with love as with a wall,
Give them in dreams the knowledge of Thy face,
And wipe away such stains as sin doth trace,
Sending deliverance when brave souls call.
Deliver them, O Lord, deliver them!—
These children—as Thy Son was once a child!
Make them even purer than before they fell,
Radiant in raiment clean from throat to hem
For Lord, till Thou hast cleansed these sin defiled,
Of such the kingdom not of heaven, but hell.

A Horse's Suicide.

The horses moved along the edge of the crag as though they clung to it, their bodies aslant towards the wall of granite on their right their legs moving with the precision of creatures feeling and grasping every step Like deer they moved—not like horses—and as they advanced the carts they drew swayed behind them and I thought every jolt would hurl them over the precipice Fascinated I watched—I could not choose but watch

At last came a gray horse not drawing a cart but carrying something on his back—on a pack saddle, apparently Like the rest, he came on stealthily sniffing every inch of the terrible way until just at the worst and giddiest point, he paused hesitated and seemed about to turn. I saw him back himself in a crouching attitude against the wall of rock behind him lowering his haunches and rearing his head in a strange manner The idea flashed on me that he would certainly turn, and then—what would happen?

More horses were advancing, and two beasts could not possibly pass each other on that narrow ledge! But I was totally unprepared for the ghastly thing that did happen The miserable horse had been seized with the awful mountain madness that sometimes overtakes men on stupendous heights—the madness of suicide With a frightful scream that sounded partly like a cry of supreme desperation, partly like one of furious and frenzied joy the horse reared himself to his full height on the horrible ledge, shook his head wildly and—leaped with a frantic spring into the air sheer over the precipice and into the foam beneath —Anna B Kingsford.

A London Fad.

"Whaloid Infallible Cure for Consumption. Dispensing hours 8 to 11 a. m, 3 to 5 p m " On turning down Oxford street my attention was attracted by this huge sign on the opposite side of the street, and also by the number of people flocking into the building Entering the building I was at a loss what to make of the matter as all I could see was the crowd and a large tank in the center of the room This tank was somewhat less long thirty feet wide and, as I learned afterwards about thirty feet deep having been constructed at a great expense While waiting patiently for developments, I found that the liquid was being lowered or let out by some means. Soon a smooth black surface appeared to view, and as the water continued to recede I became aware that a captive whale was on exhibition. Surprised at not having to pay any admission fee, I was soon made aware of the reason. A frame work had been constructed on which the animal rested, and soon an expert milkman was engaged in extracting for the consumptives whaloid (or whale's milk), which was greedily absorbed at five shillings per glass —Druggists' Bulletin

Bootblacks Require Capital.

"It requires capital now to become a first class bootblack," said a ragged little, dirty faced polisher on Park row Until the past four or five years the shines were distributed wholly by a miscellaneous assortment of ragged little darkies, who had no regular run of custom Not more than one was permitted on a corner, or four at the intersection of two streets, and one on either side in the center of the block. They were required to bring written permission from the owner of the premises before which they desired to stand.

This brought a revolution in the business of blacking The possession of permanent stands in which they could not be disturbed as long as they behaved themselves led to the purchase of chairs and an outfit which formerly would have been too bulky to carry about. Some of them have a platform, studded as the taste of the magnate suggests, with brass nails, and prettily carpeted with Brussels. The box contains half a dozen brushes of various sizes two or three kinds of blacking and a bottle of water The outfit costs considerable for a bootblack.—New York Star

She Wasn't at Home.

While Hamilton Fish was secretary of state Mrs. Fish made it her invariable practice to return all calls made upon her Of course, many in the throng were unfashionable but that made no difference.

One day a lady of East Washington thought she would see what an official reception was like, and so she followed the crowd through Mrs. Fish's parlors and dropped her card at the door.

In due time Mrs. Fish's carriage stopped before a small frame house in East Washington, and the lady at the moment was occupied in the honest but not aristocratic occupation of scrubbing the front steps.

Mrs. Fish stepped out of her carriage and, presenting her card, asked to see the lady of the house.

"She is not in," said the lady calmly, and resumed her scrubbing, while Mrs. Fish returned to her carriage.—Chicago Herald.

The Cary Sisters' Sycamore Tree.

By the Hamilton turnpike, in Hamilton county, O, and on the way from College hill, stands a large sycamore tree that was planted there in 1832 by Alice and Phoebe Cary They were then 6 and 13 years old, and coming home from school one day they saw a small tree a farmer had grubbed and thrown away in the road. [illegible] they planted and cared for as children will, and now the tree flourishes, and every one who passes by stops under it for a [illegible] shade, and [illegible]

LIFE IN THE SEVERED HEAD.

The Survival of Consciousness After Decapitation Proven.

A volume has just been published at Paris in which Dr Paul Loye, under the title of "La Mort par la Decapitation," studies the question as to whether, after decapitation, consciousness survives for a short time in the severed head and physical suffering is felt in both parts of the executed body

Every time a head falls under the sword or under the executioner's ax, says Dr. Loye, the imagination of the spectators has, in the physiognomy of the victim, looked for proofs of the survival of will and consciousness The eyes turned, which was a sign of pain, the lips moved, which showed that they wanted to speak, the mouth opened, in order to bite, in a kind of fury There is not a movement of the face which has not been interpreted as a mark of the continuation of feeling And ever since the guillotine mowed down the heads of multitudes during the reign of terror, scientists have stood around the scaffold bidding all their humane faculties vanish, and concentrating their whole intellect on the one question, "Does consciousness remain after the victim's head is severed from the body?"

In connection with this band Dr Loye quotes a terrible story told by M. Petitgand about an Anamite who was beheaded by the sword in 1875 at Saigon

"The place of execution was the Plain of Tombs, a vast sandy tract, serving as cemetery to the Anamites and the Chinese Four Anamite pirates, taken with their arms in their hands, were to be beheaded. The chief of the band, a man in the prime of life energetic muscular, brave without boasting and firm to the very last, had attracted my special attention and I decided to make my observations on him only. Without losing sight of him for a single moment I exchanged a few words in a loud voice with the officer in charge and noticed that the patient was also looking at me with the liveliest attention The preparations having been completed I took my stand at the distance of about two yards from him He knelt down but before bending his head he exchanged a rapid look with me

"His head fell down at the distance of about a yard and a quarter from where I stood It did not roll in the usual way, but stood with the surface of the wound resting on the sand a position by which the hemorrhage was accidentally reduced to a minimum At this moment I was terror stricken at seeing the eyes of the doomed man fixed frankly on my eyes Not daring to believe in a conscious manifestation, I went quickly to one side of the head lying at my feet, and I found that the eyes followed me Then I returned to my first position still the eyes went with me for a short distance and then quitted me quite suddenly The face expressed at that moment a conscious agony, the agony of a person in a state of acute asphyxia. The mouth opened violently as if to take in a breath of air and the head thrown off its equilibrium by the motion rolled over This contraction of the maxillary muscles was the last sign of life. Since the moment of decapitation from fifteen to twenty seconds had passed. —New York Press.

A Remarkable Adventure with Tigers.

Mr Gabbett, district engineer at Abu road had a remarkable adventure with tigers lately Mr Gabbett was traveling by trolly between Abu road and Roh when one of the gatekeepers gave him khabar of a family of tigers in an adjoining jungle, and Mr Gabbett, accompanied by his trolly men and the old gatekeeper started at once for the scene of operations He had not long to wait before three fine tigers broke cover and he dropped the foremost dead with a well directed shot He then fired at the next one but, though the brute was hard hit, he managed to make off toward a river bed in the vicinity Mr Gabbett then had a shot at the third, and succeeded in wounding him badly, but the animal beat a retreat into a cave hard by In the mean time the tiger which had gone toward the river bed fell in with a shepherd, whom he mauled rather badly Mr Gabbett opened fire on stripes, who was hit and rolled over, but charged and was hit twice again Mr Gabbett was aiming another shot when his foot slipped and he fell, and the infuriated beast dealt him a blow on the head which rendered him insensible. The old gatekeeper very pluckily attacked the tiger with his sword but only diverted the fury of the animal to himself The brute felled him to the ground with a stroke of his paw, and then returned to Mr Gabbett. This diversion saved that gentleman's life, for the tiger only succeeded in clawing him slightly and then fell dead. A fourth tiger also appeared on the scene, but did not molest any one Mr Gabbett was brought into Abu road —Calcutta Englishman.

Mr Irving's Friend.

Mr Henry Irving had once a friend he did not ask for orders, but, nevertheless, he took the deepest interest in the great actor's performance He sat on the stage night after night, till it was time to ring up the curtain, and then went up to Mr Irving's dressing room, which he did not leave till the curtain was about to be rung down He could not go with him everywhere, but accompanied him to Southampton when Mr Irving was leaving for the continent. Half heart broken he saw him go off in the boat, and in an hour after was missed by his companions whose company was evidently of no consequence to him They were in a state of great anxiety as to what had happened to Mr Irving's devoted friend Three days after he turned up on the stage of the Lyceum theatre, having evidently done the journey on foot, for his feet were bleeding and his coat was covered with mud. How the poor dog discovered his way is among the mysteries. Mr Irving's friend is dead, great was the grief thereat.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Planting the Flag on Mount St. Elias.

The groups of snow clad peaks visible to the naked eye were countless, and to the northward, in which direction the view was barred, their number is doubtless quite as great only a few of them, however impressed us as being very high or very striking in shape Some of them rose out of the snow in such a manner as to lead one to believe that they had been recently buried and were waiting to be dug out. When I say that but few appeared very high or striking, I should except Fairweather and Crillon which were plainly visible above the clouds, though 140 miles distant. The ocean was covered with a fog, it frequently is in these latitudes, in fact, it would often be raining for a whole day at the beach, while about St. Elias the sky would be cloudless. At 3 o clock we thought it best to begin our downward journey, as we did not care to be caught out over night. A small American flag presented to the expedition by a lady of Sitka was placed in a tin can and left at Flag Rock, a point about 10,000 feet high.—Scribner's.

Fast Telegraphing.

The most remarkable time made in communicating by means of electricity with the old world was that in the case of Hermann Muenstering, of this city, recently. At 10:40 in the morning he cabled Ross, in Prussia. Returning to town after lunch, less than one hour and a half later, he found his reply [illegible]

KILLING A CATAMOUNT.

LUKE FAULKNER'S TERRIBLE BATTLE WITH A WILDCAT

The Brute Took Possession of the House. The Negro Man Who Was Going to Smash 'Um but Didn't—Luke's Subsequent Fondness for Large Knives.

Who is that gentleman with the large gray whiskers?

This is the question often asked of an old well known blacksmith in Berrien county now nearing on to a ripe old age

It is Luke Faulkner the man who had such a terrible encounter with a catamount some thirty years ago I don't suppose you would find one-half dozen men in Berrien county that would have had half the courage that this man did possess at the time I write of

The facts and circumstances of the case are about as follows

You will recollect that thirty or thirty five years ago Berrien county was very thinly settled and consequently wild animals were more numerous than they are now It is true there are now in these days of George Mes and Shade Dorminy's occasionally a catamount but they are not to be compared to the catamount of thirty years ago

SHE THOUGHT IT WAS THE DOG

But to the subject in hand Luke had not long been married He lived on a little clearing near the ten mile creek famous for the number of wild cats catamounts etc, that roamed its banks and swamps in quest of fish or a stray litter of young pigs.

The day on which this episode took place was mill day with Luke, and as the mill was some distance off it was a pretty big day trip and if the mill happened to be crowded it took till in the night to accomplish the trip And it so happened that the mill was crowded

No one was left with Mrs Faulkner for there was no danger was apprehended during the day time and Luke instructed her that if perchance he was gone till after dark she should go down at sundown to a neighbor's house a little way distant on the road to the mill so that he could be ready when her husband came back from the mill.

The days wore heavily away as it does to all young wives when first left to themselves until the sun seemed to stand still But finally the shades of evening began to lengthen and many an anxious glance was cast up the road to see if Luke was yet coming

No Luke.

The [illegible] prepared for the night the supper cooked all preparations were made for the night and Mrs Faulkner was sitting by a slow fire knitting and waiting Waiting for the one or both of two things For the return of her husband or for the approach of the time when she should go to the neighbors.

It was time she should start. She would knit one round once more. Pit a pat—pit a pat. She heard the dog jump the fence adjoining walking in the piazza and she turned to look expecting to see her husband driving up the lane.

What was her fear and surprise when instead of the dog a great big ugly catamount walked in [illegible] and turned and walked [illegible] bed and lay down on a pile of [illegible]

Can you imagine her feelings? Gently easing up from her chair and out at the door she fairly flew to the neighbor's house mentioned. It was distant about half a mile and the distance was made in quick time.

The [illegible] was the owner of a slave a large [illegible] fellow whom he had thought [illegible] get to go and run the cat off But [illegible] Me to fraid of dat war [illegible] go

In an hour or so Luke returned from the mill [illegible] and called for his wife [illegible] arrangement and was told the story of the cat.

He said [illegible] would go with him if [illegible] the two dogs along. [illegible] A large land light was procured and they started

Now [illegible] if he jump on me you smash um and if he jump on you I smash um

THE STRUGGLE IN THE DARK.

All right They walked on. The negro kept behind like a cowardly puppy They walked up to the yard fence and began to make preparations for a desperate encounter The negro's heart beat a double tattoo all the while. Just as the light was well replenished and divided so that each should have a light in case one got put out and Luke reached in his pocket to get his knife biff! he felt the weight of a big dog right in his breast and face which knocked him over and put out his light Oh! horrors! he could hear the negro's feet packing the grit way off up the road Gone! He had thrown down his light and betook himself to flight Luke by himself. Certainly by himself in the dark and a big catamount making desperate struggles to lacerate his flesh with its sharp claws which was however prevented by a thick new suit of jeans which he had on. It was a tight hand to hand fight hard [illegible] which would gain the ascendancy and win the night as it were Finally Luke placed his left hand on his throat and held such a firm grasp that the cat [illegible] still with its talons buried in his clothing With his right hand and his teeth he managed to get out and open his knife and with a sweeping [illegible] cut its throat from ear to ear and [illegible] bone was made to relinquish its [illegible] Luke's clothing was literally torn [illegible] shreds but he received no wound of a serious nature.

When he returned for his wife he found the negro cuddled up in the corner having a genuine dog ague. Luke didn't say much to him for he knew that this is the very thing the negro would do when they started. When asked why he did not stand his ground he replied "Wy Mas Luke my legs jes gin to wiggl and I soon was back here won [illegible] here I d dig yer grabe."

Luke got to making pocket knives after that and to this day carries one that is a sight to behold, it is so large. I don't blame him do you?—Valdosta (Ga.) Times

Water Power.

The artesian wells of Dakota are probably the most remarkable for pressure and the immense quantity of water supplied of any ever opened More than 100 of such wells, from 500 to 1 600 feet deep are today in successful operation, distributed throughout twenty nine counties from Yankton, in the extreme south to Pembina, in the extreme north giving forth a constant, never varying stream, which is in no wise affected by the increased number of wells and showing a gauge pressure in some instances as high as 160 170, 175 and 187 pounds to the square inch This tremendous power is utilized in the more important towns for water supply fire protection and the driving of machinery at a wonderful saving on the original cost of plant and maintenance when compared with steam In the city of Yankton a forty horse power turbine wheel, operating a tow mill by day and an electric light plant by night, is driven by the force of water flowing from an artesian well, the cost of obtaining which was no greater than would have been the cost of developing the same power, not counting the continual outlay necessary, had steam been employed, for fuel, repairs, and the salaries for engines and firemen. What has been accomplished through the aid of natural gas and cheap fuel in Building [illegible]

THE BOOMERANG.

WHAT THIS CRUDE WEAPON CAN ACTUALLY ACCOMPLISH

Many of the Fables Told About It Exploded—The Cockatoo Story Made Out of "Whole Cloth"—There Is No Occasion to Invent Stories About the Uncanny Thing

More has been written and less is understood of the boomerang than of almost any other weapon. It is generally known to be a flat stick of wood bent into a shape which suggests the combination of a V and a U, although with the extremities spread apart until they are at right angles with each other In point of fact, boomerangs are of almost every shape, from semi-circular to nearly straight and seem to depend for their efficiency not so much upon the evident form as upon the curves which are shown upon their flat sides. If one takes a boomerang and looks along its sharp outer edge it is seen that this edge presents a wavy appearance—a delicately adjusted sinuosity like the line of a long screw This curve is not elaborately fashioned or smoothed into evenness the hard wood of which the boomerang is usually made, being picked out with short blows from a sharpened flint held in the hand, almost always shows in deed, infinite irregularities.

NO UNIFORM PLAN

What rule of construction the savage artificer follows even he himself would probably be unable to say Yet he has some definite plan in mind, no doubt, for while he chips and pecks away at the wood he takes frequent squints along its edge to see how his curves are progressing I have never seen two boomerangs that were just alike, but all are similar in their relations of curves along the flat side. The boomerang maker knows instinctively just where his boomerang will go when he throws it, although he never seems to aim any two in the same way

More lies have been told about the boomerang than can be well enumerated and nearly every Australian traveler comes back with a fresh assortment One hears of men who can so throw a boomerang that it kills an enemy behind a tree and then comes cheerfully fluttering back to its owner who thereupon hurls it on a fresh mission of carnage A flock of frightened cockatoos speeding in intricate gyrations through air to escape the attack of natives who want a bird for dinner are pursued at every turn by these erratic weapons which strike them down a dozen each and so return to the hand that cast them Old wives fables these at which Australians laugh knowing, in the nature of things their falsity

In the first place the war boomerang is not made for return and is only slightly bent so that it may go hopping and bounding along the earth like a hoop and make capacious holes in the bodies of the adversary. The [illegible] are of hard heavy wood and ugly things to be hit with; but the return boomerang is simply a plaything or to be used in light hunting and although it might give a man a painful rap could hardly seriously injure him. As for the cockatoo story it has this much of truth that a native boomerang hurled [illegible] straight [illegible] the [illegible] in their flight and perhaps knock one down—but his boomerang would drop too, having no power of flight to [illegible] strike anything.

WHAT IT WILL REALLY DO

The boomerang is sufficiently remarkable without being regarded in the light of a long bow and drawn by every tourist in the colony It is held perpendicularly and taken firmly in the hand by one of its extremities with the other pointed forward and is hurled with a full arm and a step by a run and swing of the whole body A slight turn of the wrist at the moment of discharge causes it to assume various erratic courses Sometimes it will fly straight forward for 100 or even 200 yards then rise sharply to a great height lose its force and flutter down to the feet of the thrower Again it will rise in the air swoop down with frightful rapidity and skim around in a great semi circle a few inches from the ground rise once more and return to the spot whence it started

It will also start off in a great swoop to the right reverse it and turn to the left skim around the thrower in a series of ever narrowing circles and finding their center fall into it like an exhausted bird There is something uncanny about the thing Its movements are so unexpected and out of reason that it seems to be alive and to take a savage delight in strange shoots and dashes which make the new chum (Australian equivalent for tenderfoot) dodge every time it turns [illegible] it should knock him on the head.

The yarn about the Australian blacks always throwing the boomerang with their backs to the object they desire to hit is a piece of the same whole cloth as the cockatoo fable and the lie about the missile returning to its owner after killing the gentleman behind the tree An expert thrower can cause his boomerang to shoot behind him after a short preliminary excursion in front and come very near a given object but if he really wants to hit anything either in hunting or war he doesn't fool away his time with the return boomerang but throws the heavy nearly straight one which goes direct to the mark without any flourishes Such is the boomerang—a two-form[illegible] one shape used for business the other for sport —Cor Springfield (Mass) Republican.

The Colored Man Lionized in Germany.

Berlin is less cosmopolitan than almost any other of the large cities of the world It is comparatively seldom that one sees strange costumes and strange people as is daily the case in New York Paris and London It is not a great while since the street gamins would follow an Englishman or American whose dress differed somewhat from the ordinary and cry at the top of their voices Englander! or Yankee Although that has changed somewhat in the course of time the novelty has not yet worn off A colored man clad in respectable garments who appears in Berlin is almost lionized. There is no race prejudice. On the contrary, he is the equal of all and people speak of the handsome brunette and the frauleins saddle Pegasus in his honor.

I have seen hundreds of promenaders stop before the Cafe sur Opera and gaze for minutes at the colored man who acts as "porter" to the establishment. His presence draws numerous people to the restaurant who would otherwise pass it by. The big fellow appreciates his position now like [illegible] ... his white teeth in smiles of recognition to many fashionable people in the street. His wages are high, and, being the only attraction of his kind in Berlin, he is able to [illegible] [illegible]
